If the arting of a romance he a good extune for the writing one, the author of the volume before as may justly lay claim to the privilege. There have been few more romantic or interesting histories of domestic adventurer published than the trathful and beautifully written descriptions of Mrs. Moodie's own experience in this country which have from time to time bean given to the world. She possesses the three great qualifications necessary to a successful novels—the power to acalize character, a lively descriptive style, and the faculty of constructing a plot.

"The book is full of adventure, abounding in incidents, charminary marrated"

"From The Chronicle, Belleville, Canada.

"This work from the no less happy than prolife pen of Mrs. Moodie, is perhaps more interesting than any that have preceded it not even excepting her admirable work. BY WILLIAM NORTH.

With mingled feelings of sorrow and satefaction the undersigned annunce that they will shorsly publish the above thrilling work by the late William North—sorrow that one so gifted has fallen a marry to his own fine sensibilities and the hard struggle of literary life, and satefaction that they, the undersigned, should have the last production of his genius in their hands, and his own letter to them, written a few hours before his death, and couched in terms as flattering to them as it was excitable to the heart which, bursting with its own agony, is Mr. North, in addition to many articles published in Harper's, Potnam's and Graham's Magazines, in The United States Review and The Knickerbocker, was also the author of the following highly successful novels published in England, viz: "Anti Conengaby," "The Impostor," "The City of the Jungiers," also of various translations of celebrated French and German authors, and of a very interesting philosophical work entitled "The Ininite Republic" The "Slave of the Lamp," which will be issued by the undersigned, is the master piece of Mr. North's genius, and the tone which pervades it shows that it is but a transcript of his own hitter experience. The interest throughout is intense, while the style is graphic and vigorous. Mr. North, in addition to many articles published in Harper's,

Just Published, excribing picture of this dreadful disaster, from a sketch, by JAMES SMITH of Jackson, Miss, the passenger who was picked up on the 29th, by the British ship Cambria, at the same time with Capt. Luca.

A short time before the Arctic went down, Mr. Smith observed the staging which the ship's expenter had used in endesvoring to stop the leak, still alongside, and letting himself down upon it floated slewly off, and was within a short distance when the final catastrophe ensued. Being alone, he shed, perhaps, a better opportunity of observing the scene thas others of the survivors; and, while retaining a vivid remembrance of it, made the sketch from which this print was taken—a touching memento of that unparalleled event.

The ECRAPHIC ARTS.

And the Literature related to them.

In presenting this new enterprise to the public, the Editors propose to supply a want houg felt by those who are interested in Art, of a journal which should advocate its interests—a medium between Art-thinkers and Art-lovers—between these who have studied and dearte to instruct, and those who have studied and dearte to instruct, and those who have admired and dearte to learn.

In undertaking to fill this vagant field, we promise that with all the power given us, we will endeavor to lead those whom we may influence to the perception of the Highest Seasity, or at least, to the distinguishing the difference between that which is true and eartest to that which is only powerful or attractive by display of superficial excellence.

In this work we shall spare no pains to secure the cooperation of the most powerful writers of whatever country, and particularly that of artists themselves, whose communications possess a practical value the houghts of mere theorists can never have. Our prore Correspondence will be the most complete and valuable we can secund and will be drawn from all piaces of interest in an artistic point of time frinciples of Art, but will be open to its Romance and the Poetic relations, and all things wherein Bosairy mases daily appeared to our uppectic lives.

BFAUTIFUL BERTHA. 1 vol., (smo., ilustrated.

"There is scarcely a female writer who can compare with this lady in writing stories for the young, and this hook is one of her best efforts. It pleases the imagination, yet at the same time inculcates a good moral. It should be in the hands of every youth." THE RAT-CATCHER. 1 vol., 16mo., Illustrated. Price

"Merritz is the most popular writer of children's books in Germany. His takes are attractive from the interest of the story, and valuable from the enceilent moral which they includes."
